Chickens

Ameraucana: Good layers of tinted eggs that range from olive to sky blue, and even pink! They come in a massive variety of colors and patterns, but the one thing they all have in common are their ear muffs and beards. These birds are commonly confused with "Easter Eggers", however the two are not the same. Ameraucanas have to conform to a breed standard, while Easter Eggers do not.

Barred Rock: Dark grey to black, and white striped birds, the zebras of the chicken world! They are very cold-hardy and egg production stays steady during the winter due to this. They lay large brown eggs, and tend to range from 250 - 300 eggs per year.

Black Australorp: Tight feathered and heavysset birds. They are solid black, with an iridescent green sheen. Excellent dual-purpose birds as they are large when mature and are great layers. Tend to have docile, yet curious dispositions. Hens weigh around 8lbs.

Buff Orpington: Very large, fluffy, and heavysset solid yellow birds. They are moderately good layers (200 - 280 eggs per year), but are excellent pets as they enjoy being around people. Slow to mature, and can be bullied by more dominant birds. Hens weigh around 8lbs.

Fast Whites: Rapid maturing broilers who will grow to 5-6 lbs within 7-8 weeks. They are extremely poor layers and are strictly meat birds.

Gold Sex Link: Similar to the Pro-Red. Medium sized birds who are heavy layers - 300+ light brown eggs per year when mature! Hens weigh around 7 lbs and are white, light yellow, and gold. Excellent cold-hardiness.

Pro-Red: Medium sized birds who are very heavy layers - 300+ brown eggs per year when mature! Hens weigh around 7 lbs and range from a light, rusty, red, to a dark, brownish red. Excellent cold-hardiness.

Silver/Golden Laced Wyandotte: Large, docile, cold-hardy birds. They are quick to mature making them a good dual-purpose breed. Hens weigh around 7lbs. Silver and golden laced are the two most common color variations.

Speckled Sussex: Heavy, dual purpose birds who are also very cold hardy. Good layers of large, light brown and tinted eggs. Their plumage is distinct as they have a dark mahogany base with individual feathers ending in a black bar and white tip. These birds also make excellent show poultry due to their intelligent and mellow demeanor.

Rhode Island Red: Heavier birds who are also dual-purpose. Excellent layers of large, light to medium brown colored eggs. They are a dark red, and have some black feathering in their tails. Hens weigh around 7lbs.

Turkeys

Broad breasted (BB) white: Very large turkeys bred for meat production. These are your typical grocery store variety turkey, and can reach 50 lbs at full maturity. Their white feathers leave no pin marks when the birds are dressed.

Broad breasted (BB) bronze: Large turkeys bred for meat production. They are known for their coppery-bronze coloration, and can reach between 30 - 50 lbs at maturity.
